Events of Interest From Washington

By J. E. Jones
BANKERS HOLD ANNUAL POW-WOW

Secretary of the Treasury Houston told the American Bankers' Association at their Washington meeting that there should be a repeal of the excess profits tax, with a suitable substitute. The Secretary voiced the opinion that the "menace of uncertainties" should be removed from the taxpayers. After discussing the present indiscriminate tax laws of the Federal Government because they were rapidly assembled to meet the emergencies of war, Mr. Houston urged the wiping out of the irregularities existing in the present credit and financial schemes of the Government. He advocated a prompt re-survey of all tax laws. This sentiment was heartily applauded by the bankers of the Nation who were assembled in great numbers. Secretary Houston cited many instances to prove that genuine progress is being made in the industrial and financial affairs of Europe, as well as in our own country. He told the bankers that the foreign investments of Great Britain amounted to $15,000,000,000, of which $3,000,000,000 is invested in securities in the United States. Even "bleeding France" has $8,000,000,000 invested abroad, and a small portion of this is in Russia. As Uncle Sam's big banker, Secretary Houston's statements showing how "the world is getting on her feet," was received as good news by America's captains of finance.

FARM INTERESTS AND FREE SEEDS

A Cabinet officer who made a hit with the nation's bankers at the Washington convention, was Secretary of Agriculture Meredith, who emphasized the fact that "the farmer must secure his cost of production plus a reasonable profit." He described agriculture as the basic interest of America, and declared that individual bankers in every community must use their strongest endeavors to promote the welfare of the farmers. Mr. Meredith told of the constructive work done by the Department in preventing wheat rust, checking the cattle tick, the boll weevil, and other pests. He denounced the false economy of Congress which put several divisions of the Department of Agriculture practically out of business, while $250,000 was voted for "free seeds" for Congressional distribution. The Secretary said that he was sorry that he could not say that "free seeds" are "good seeds." He explained that at the close of the season that the Department of Agriculture purchases the "left overs" from the big seed houses of the country. These institutions will not guarantee the seeds sold to the Government, which are then distributed throughout the country. A good many people have believed that the Government seeds have special merit, and think that they come from experimental farms and places that insure their quality. The head of the Agricultural Department dispels this illusion. He describes the free distribution of seeds as a custom unworthy of being continued, and as a piece of wanton waste of public money.

BANKERS ARE WISE MEN

John Skelton Williams is Controller of the Currency, a position he holds without having been confirmed by the Senate. He seems to be the prickly finger of the Administration. Just as the bankers were about to assemble for their Washington conference Williams broke loose in one of his periodical outbursts and charged that excessive interest rates of New York banks have been "a potent influence in depressing seriously the prices of all investment bonds and standard shares." His statement was promptly challenged by bankers who pointed out that money is a commodity, and viewed in that light it can increase less in the rates charged for it than any other commodity. The bankers of the country are in constant touch with the Federal Government, because if national bank control, the Federal banking system, etc. Therefore when a noisy individual like Williams tries to put over a sensational charge, he is promptly asked by the bankers of the country whether the fact that money is being loaned for the most part at from 6 to 7 1/2 per cent does not in itself practically refute his statements.

Bankers are wise men, and they know what the folks back home are thinking. Perhaps they direct most of the industrial and economic thought of their communities more than any other class of people, unless it may be the news paper editors. It is certain that the bankers who visited Washington knew most of the defects in the Federal system of taxation, and they did not hesitate to point them out. Some of the

FIRE AT NORWAY POWER STATION

Boiler Room Burned Out Early Thursday Morning

An alarm was given about 4 o'clock Thursday morning for a fire at the Norway power station of the Oxford Electric Co. The fire, the origin of which is not known, was in the boiler room, and brick walls kept it from spreading to the other parts of the building. The roof was burned off the boiler room, and the room itself is a wreck. It is not thought that the boilers were damaged. Loss is probably something like $5,000.

Prompt response was made by the Norway firemen to the alarm, and several streams were quickly on the blaze. A call was telephoned to the Mason Manufacturing Co. boiler room in So. Paris to give the alarm, and after some mixing of signals the big whistle of the Mason Co. settled down into the chief's call, which was blown continuously for something like twenty minutes. South Paris was pretty thoroughly waked up, and part of the department was quickly at Norway.

Within an hour the all out was sounded. In consequence of the fire, there was no power until about four o'clock in the afternoon, and electric lights and motors were out of commission in the two towns, causing some suspension of work and business besides considerable inconvenience. The power was also cut for a portion of the day Friday.—Oxford Democrat.

OXFORD COUNTY COUNCIL BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The Council is fortunate in having obtained the consent of Mr. Howard W. Tyler to become scoutmaster of the Bethel troop. Mr. Tyler has had previous experience in scouting in connection with the troop formerly affiliated with the Methodist church, and is popular with all of the boys. Glyndon Savin and Edward Hanson will serve as assistant scoutmasters. A "get-together" meeting of all men in the county interested in Scout work will be held in Rumford on Friday evening. The training school for Scout leaders will hold its opening session, the topic being "Methods of troop organization; How to reach the boy," presented by Scout Executive Pollard. There will be seven sessions in the course, which will be given both in Rumford and South Paris. Mr. Thomas A. DeCosta, Superintendent of School in Canton, is Scoutmaster of the new troop which has just been organized in that town.

Two ghosts appeared as the guests arrived and escorted them upstairs and down to see the weird sights before removing their wraps.

When supper was announced by the hostess all repaired to the dining room where a bountiful supper was served consisting of baked beans, hot dishes and all the goodies which make a supper delicious. At each plate were little favors and as each took their place a basket was passed around containing paper caps and each one was requested to wear one which added much to the merriment of the party. The Institute will comprise courses along the lines of sex education, social hygiene, heredity and eugenics, methods of public school education, clinic management, and special courses in the diagnosis of the venereal diseases.

CHRISTMAS SEAL DESIGN
FOR 1920

The design for this season's Christmas seal has already been chosen, and the millions of seals which will be on sale during the holiday period are now being distributed.

In this state, the Maine Public Health Association will have charge of the campaign, and is already appointing committees and organizing the big drive. Last season the towns of Portage, Gardiner, and Kineo lead the state for the greatest per capita sale of seals in Maine. What communities will take first place in 1920?

The seals, which can be bought for so small a sum as one penny each, serve as admirable stickers to Christmas packages at no greater cost than the conventional commercial product, and, in addition to their holiday greeting, have back of them the serious purpose of promoting better health throughout the land and stamping out the great white plague in Maine and her sister states.

"Support the Christmas seal sale in your town when the time comes," says the Commissioner of Health, Dr. L. D. Bristol, "and during December, when the campaign is on, not only buy the seals but invest in health bonds. The money from the seals and the bonds goes to support health work here, and health work means longer, healthier lives to the people of Maine."

"Finé as silk," is one way of expressing quality, but it is true to the letter when you say it of

because it is actually as fine as the finest silk can make it.

Every pound of William Tell is sifted through silk, so fine that there are 21,000 meshes to the square inch.

It must go through this silk—not once, but thirteen successive times.

Because we take no chance on William Tell being clean and fine and pure, you take no chance in using it for all your baking.

Ask your neighbors who use it. They'll tell you William Tell. Tell your grocer.

SCHOOL AND HOME

Daily Preparation of the Luncheon Supplements Regular Work

Nellie Wing Farnsworth

The question of purchasing food supplies for the school lunch is not a difficult one to answer. One school board allows four dollars a month for this purpose. In most instances each child brings ten cents a week, which usually covers the expense. If ready money is not easy to obtain, the lunch may be paid for in supplies. Eggs, butter, milk and vegetables are abundant in the country and less expensive than in town. The variety of dishes that may be easily prepared and that will prove wholesome and attractive to children is sufficient to require few repetitions in the month. The following list has proved satisfactory:

Cocoa
Soups: tomato, potato, corn
Boiled rice with syrup or caramel sauce
Eggs, soft-cooked, scrambled, creamed
Eggs au gratin
Creamed macaroni with cheese
Macaroni served with tomato sauce
Potatoes: baked, creamed, scalloped
Squash dish
Irish stew
Vegetable soup
Cereals, fried mush
Hot baking-powder biscuits with syrup
Creamed salmon on crackers
Scalloped vegetables: corn or tomatoes
Chocolate bread pudding
Cheese fondue
Creamed codfish
Baked custard
Toast: milk or French toast with syrup

At the beginning of each week the teacher should appoint four housekeepers from among the boys and girls. Their duties may be assigned as she chooses but the following plan has worked out very well where it has been used.

The first housekeeper prepares, cooks and serves the dish which the school provides. The second housekeeper sets the table, wipes the dishes and puts them away. The third housekeeper washes the dishes and cleans the supply table, stove and cupboards. The fourth housekeeper brings in the water, sweeps the floor and empties the garbage.

The list of housekeepers for the week should be posted and the slips consulted frequently so that each child may serve in each capacity according to turn. A list of supplies should also be posted and given personally to those who are to furnish them.

The work of each child must be supervised by the teacher. At first, when the plan is new, the teacher herself, assisted by the older girls who have had some home training, should prepare the lunch.

Boys as well as girls should help with the lunch. In many cities, boys take cooking in school as a preparation for boy scout work or for camp cookery. Boys who live in the country are accustomed to helping with the housework and if approached in the right spirit, will prove most efficient in the work of preparing the school lunch.

The school lunch will consist of but one dish to supplement the lunch brought from home. The dishes to be served should be planned a week ahead so that the supplies may be on hand and as the children may notify their mothers what the school will provide. Thus the mother, when packing the lunch box, will know what to provide for a well balanced meal. Also, if the dish to be prepared requires much time or labor, a thoughtful teacher will arrange to have some of the preparations made early in the morning or the night before.

During the winter if the schoolhouse is cold at night, care must be taken to keep supplies from freezing. If they cannot be so kept, they will have to be brought fresh each morning from the nearest house. When water must be carried for some distance, a large cream can may be filled and brought in the bus each morning or carried from the nearest house by two of the boys.

Instead of having each pupil bring simply his share of each lunch, it may often be found even more convenient for one pupil to bring various supplies at one time and thus not have to contribute again until all the others have made their similar contributions.

A fixed period should be assigned for the lunch hour, usually about twenty minutes. Pupils should be required to remain at the table till all are dismissed. This rule prevents hasty eating and teaches one of the simple forms of courtesy.

Dishes should be washed methodically and carefully. First they should be scraped and stacked in order. There should be a pan of hot, soapy water for washing and a second pan of hot, clear water for rinsing. A dish mop or dish cloth may be used and the drying towels should be kept scrupulously clean. The drying rack may be used instead of a dish towel as it is more sanitary and quicker than the old method of wiping. Glassware should be washed first then silver and china and cooking utensils.

Paper napkins are inexpensive. Attention should be given to the proper setting of the table. The fork should be placed at the left of the plate, with the tines turned up, the knife at the right, with the sharp edge toward the plate; the spoon at the right of the knife, with the bowl turned up. The glass is placed just above the spoon. The napkin is at the left of the fork and should be folded square. The plate should be turned face up.

There will be need of only a few rules for serving. It should be remembered that dishes should be removed from the right and that those passed should be served to a guest from the left and held conveniently low.

A few rules for manners at table should be observed:

Sit erect.
Keep arms or elbows off the table.
Eat deliberately and quietly.
Take food from the side of a spoon.
Dip the spoon away from one, to avoid the appearance of greediness.
Use the knife only for cutting and spreading and lay it on the plate when it is not in use.
Lay the knife and fork, side by side, on the plate, at the right, when one has finished eating.
Do not talk with food in the mouth.
Do not clean the plate carefully of all the food with piece of bread or spoon.
Leave that task to the dishwasher.

THAT DULL ACHING

Don't worry and complain about a bad back. Get rid of it! For weak kidneys, lame and aching backs, your neighbors recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Ask your neighbor! Read this statement:

P. I. French, farmer, 25 Chapman St., Bethel, says: "I have a very high regard for Doan's Kidney Pills, for I have never used them but what they have helped me. My work has always been of a heavy nature, lumbering and lifting logs. I blame this for the starting of my kidney trouble. At times my back has been very lame and a sort of dull ache has settled in it. I had blinding, dizzy spells, when everything would turn black before me. My kidneys weren't acting regularly and I hadn't much ambition to do my work. I was advised by a friend to try Doan's Kidney Pills and went to Bossman's Drug Store. I got three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and when I had finished taking them, my troubles were over and I have never since had any more kidney disorder. I have always recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to those I have heard complaining of kidney trouble."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. French had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.—Ad.

The Anniversary

By ELVA LORENCE

(Opposite)

She was a true, lovin' woman, who had dreamed, as most of us do, of the fumbly little hands, the snugglin' little face, of our very own, and the crown of womanhood had been denied her. In the minute I stood there silent I understood, and my heart ached for her. Disappointment had changed the world, and the days and weeks of lonely brooding, while he was away, had changed her, too.

Droopin' down by the couch, I got my arms about her and did my best to comfort her.

"I know, missus," I whispered, when she had grown quiet. "But it's wrong to grieve. There's many worse troubles than yours. You have your husband—"

"My husband cares nothing for me!" she cried. "I am shut out of his life!"

"You shut yourself out, dearie," I said gently. "I am sure of it. I'm only 'Omelie' Liz. No man will ever call me his wife now, but I think I can understand why you two have gone apart, and I'd like to see you happy together again. Little children come to bind affection closer, true enough, and where the blessing is denied the greater the call for lovin' kindness. That's where you've failed, dearie. Forgive me if I hurt you by my plain speakin', but it seems to me that you've lived with disappointment so long it's made you bitter. Why not meet him tonight with a smiling face, an' say you're sorry? I know he would smile, too, and that his arms would hold you. You are together for better or worse for maybe many years. Why not always for better?"

"He has ceased to care!" she said bitterly. "He would turn from me with a laugh!"

"I think not, dearie," I said quietly. "I have seen the look in his eyes when you have left the room, and I know he, too, is wretched. Make it up to-day."

"Today!" she cried. "Today is the anniversary of our wedding day. For the first four years he marked it with a gift; he has forgotten it altogether now!"

"Oh, no!" I said, smiling confidently. "Meet him when he comes home tonight as I want you to, and see if he has forgotten. It seems such a pity you should be bad friends. Listen to me, dearie!"

And, very quietly, I told her about my last place.

She heard me through, and at the end lay back, with glistering tears in her eyes.

"Thank you, Lizzie!" she said. "That was all, but I jumped up, smilin', because I knew I had won her round."

"Now listen, ma'am," I said. "I've got a plan. He'll be home, as usual at seven for dinner. We'll have a special spread in honor of the day, and you shall be waitin' for him in your wedding dress!"

"My wedding dress!" she cried. "Oh, no, Liz; it's hopelessly old-fashioned; I should look like a fright!"

"We'll see you don't," I said. "He is going to come into the room, and find his old sweetheart, and, just as sure, you will find him again!"

"You think so, Liz?" she cried, trembling.

"Sure of it!"

"Come and dig out the dress," she said.

And laughin' at our pleasant thoughts, we tripped upstairs.

The rest of the day, until the usual hour of his home-coming, passed like a dream. The difference in the missus you'd hardly credit. She seemed another woman altogether. Now that her mind was given up to it, nothing could go amiss. His favorite dishes must be cooked; there must be flowers on the table, his slippers must be in the fender; everything must be just as he liked it.

At six o'clock she went upstairs to dress. As I put on my best apron I heard her quietly sighin'. When she called me to see how she looked I stood and smiled, because, for some reason I couldn't say a word.

The white silk dress fitted her perfectly; her eyes were shinin'; the smilin' lips had given a new expression to her face.

She looked like a happy, blushin' bride.

"Shall I do, Lizzie?" she said, with a playful curtsy.

"Oh, ma'am, you look beautiful!" I exclaimed.

"You think he'll know me?" she said.

"You'll see," I answered, laughin'.

From behind my back I held out the spray of flowers I had got from the shop with the others downstairs.

"I want you to wear this, ma'am," I said. "Let me fasten it in your gown!"

"A bunch of rosemary!" she cried. "For remembrance, ma'am."

"Thank you, Lizzie!" she said quietly, pressin' my hand; an' smilin' happily, we went down the stairs.

"When you want dinner served you'll please ring, ma'am," I said, as I turned for the kitchen. "It's nearly seven. In ten minutes he'll be here!"

As the clock struck I stood with the kitchen door open, watchin' for the sound of his key in the lock. In the dining room I knew she, too, was listenin'. For five, ten, fifteen minutes we sat there, quietly waitin'. He did not come.

I stole along the hall, and, softly openin' the vestibule door, looked out along the road. There was no sign of him. Backward and forward from kitchen to door I went a dozen times, until the clock struck eight. And then I went slowly back, and sittin' by the kitchen table, sobbed like a kid. The dinner was spoiled. All our little planning was wasted. He was not coming.

How long I sat there I couldn't say, but presently I looked up, and there was the missus' standin' in the doorway. Her face had gone white an' drawn again; the dull look came back into her eyes. She didn't cry. I think she couldn't.

"We've been a little foolish, Lizzie," she said, with a queer, harsh laugh. "You see, he has quite forgotten!"

"For the life of me I couldn't find words to say to her."

"Poor, sentimental Liz!" she cried. "I'm afraid, after all, you don't know much of men."

And with that she turned and went back again.

Nine o'clock struck, and she still sat in the dining room, broodin' and miserable. Ten came, and, with a heavy heart, I cleared away the meal. Eleven, and I heard no sound of her. When the half-hour chimed, I took my alarm clock, and, after windin' it, crept to the dining room to say good-night. Quietly I opened the door, and looked in, to find her stretched on the hearth-rug, with one arm under her head, asleep.

Gently closing the door again, I stole back to the kitchen, and sat down to wait. A few minutes before twelve his key grated in the door, and at the sound I shot up, with my hand pressed to my breast. I heard him bolt the outer door. I stood there shakin' while he hung his coat an' hat on the stand and crossed to the dining room.

"Mary!"

I caught his cry as the door shut behind him. Then—I am not ashamed to own it—I stole quietly along the hall and listened.

His shout must have aroused her, for I heard her whisper, as it faded: "Ned!"

"Mary!" he cried; and I think he must have stooped to raise her up. "What on earth—"

And then he stopped, as if the meaning of her dress and the set-out table had come to him, and for quite a spell I heard no sound, until came the pitiful outburst of chokin' sobs she could no longer hold back.

"My poor girl!" he cried. "I did not think you cared any longer! You have been waiting for me all this time! I—what a blind fool I have been!"

"I wanted you to come—to tell you I'm sorry!" she said. "Ned, I am ashamed! Will you forgive—and let us be as we were—always?"

"Mary!" he cried.

And I stole quietly upstairs to my room, smilin' an' dryin' the silly tears from my face.

GREATER POWER THAN WORDS

Great Preacher's Dramatic Action Stirred His Hearers as Nothing Else Could Have Done.

In one of the great Italian cathedrals a noted friar of the order of Saint Francis, then newly founded, was preaching. A great concourse of people filled the building, and twilight deepened the heavy shadows of the dimly lit and heavily arched chancel and nave. The friar preached almost in darkness.

His theme was "God's Love to Men and Their Response." With the passionate eloquence of the period, he pictured God's mighty act of creation, the wonder of his gift of life and the beauty of the earth. But more especially he dwelt upon the gift of the Only-Begotten Son—the matchless beauty of Christ's life among men—the glorious redemption offered in him to all who would repent and believe.

The friar's earnestness deeply impressed the people, and a solemn stillness hung over the vast assembly. The darkness by this time had deepened still further, and the congregation could only just perceive the outline of the friar's dark-robed figure.

"Now," he continued, "let us consider how mankind has responded to the divine goodness and mercy."

With these words he left the pulpit and passed slowly to the altar. From among his many candles he chose one and lighted it. This one gleam of pure light shone upon a great crucifix hung above the altar. Slowly and solemnly and without a word, in the breathless stillness of that vast throng, the friar raised the candle until it lit up first one wound, then another, in the feet, the hands, the side, and finally the sacred head of the Crucified.

There the light lingered a moment, and the hush deepened upon the awestruck congregation. Then he blew out the light and sat down. The sermon was over. The stillness was broken only by the audible sobs—YOUTH'S COMPANION.

Words of Wise Men.

Kind words are the brightest of home flowers; they make a paradise of the humblest home.

Religion is not a thing of noise and spasm, but of silent self-sacrifice and quiet growth.

The best parts of human qualities are tenderness and delicacy of feeling in little matters and the desire to soothe and please others.

Whoever loses his patience loses more than his patience. He loses his hold on the very crisis that made him lose his patience. He loses the ability to think, the balance of judgment which he ought to have at their best in order to face rightly the thing that has thrown him into confusion.

PEOPLE OF OUR TOWN

The Easy Talker is all warmed up and is going so good that he has forgotten all about the Speaker of the Evening, whom he is introducing.

Every town has a Self-Made Orator who can go to the Mat with the Dictionary on short notice and Comes in Handy when the Regular Speaker can't Get There.

A JUNIOR LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

When the United States army transport, Pocahontas, was three days at sea, carrying the 501 Boy Scouts of America, delegates to the International contests and demonstrations of the Boy Scouts of the world, and their 57 men leaders to England, Chief Scout Executive James B. West sent the following radio message to Col. L. V. Gignilliat, who was in charge of the expedition:

"Five hundred thousand Boy Scouts and leaders at home and entire American nation send greetings to these comrades and representatives to the International Scout contests aboard Pocahontas and rejoice in confidence that this great meeting of scouts from the world over will be a Junior League of Nations and be of immediate influence in developing international brotherhood and good will. May each member of Jamboree delegation be ever mindful of scout oath and law and opportunities for daily good turn, God bless you all."

TIDE RAINY DAY

The day is cold, and dark and dreary;
It rains, and the wind is never weary;
The vine still clings to the moulting
wall,
But at every gust the dead leaves fall,
And the day is dark and dreary.

My life is cold and dark and dreary;
Who feel as I did, I suffered in silence
Many times on account of my pride,
But now I know that a good laxative is essential to good health. I neglected my health trying to keep cheery and pretending I had terrible pains, was "grouchy" and my headaches almost killed me with pain, and worst of all from my viewpoint I had a sorrow, unbecoming complexion which was not helped by face powders. Why didn't I try to cure myself rather than pretend? After taking Dr. True's Elixir,
I now know that a laxative was what I needed. Dr. True's Elixir is mild and pleasant to take, and works just right for me. My complexion cleared up bright and ruddy, blemishes vanished and every one remarked how much better I looked. — Mrs. E. J. B.,

Be still, and heart, and cease repining,
Behind the clouds is the sun still shining;
Thy fate is the common fate of all,
Into each life some rain must fall,
Some days must be dark and dreary.

TO EACH HIS OWN

You roll along in your limousine, I suffer the dust you fling,
As over the footpath I blithely fare,
where the glad heart veers and sings;
Hiding is good, and I like not dust,
but this I tell you true:
For all your cushioned and careless ease,
I would not change with you!

You glance through a window casually,
and note that the trees are green;
Greeting I joy in the new nest hid in the hedgehog's sheltering screen;
An instant you see the squirrel's pole,
on the trunk of a grand old tree,
I stop for a friendly argument, and he shares my nuts with me!

You fret at the trucky, sunshot shower that dims your crystal pane;
I stand blissbound in the fragrance
loosed by the fingers of the rain;
You catch a glimpse, as you whirl along,
of the wide sky's blue and white;
I thrill to the sweep of its loveliness,
its marvelous breadth and height!

To some engagement you hurry past,
with small thought of the way,
I loiter on, from friend to friend, at the close of a toil-filled day;
You ride over rather a borsome road,
and swiftly as may be;
I walk, in a wooded world—and yet,
you would not change with me!

JUST A JOB

Is it just a job that is yours to hold,
A task that offers you so much gold,
Just so much work that is yours to do,
With never a greater goal in view?
What do you see at your desk or loom,
Or the spot you fill in life's busy room?
Merely a flickering lamp that burns
With a sickly light as the mill wheel turns,
And the same old grind in the same old ways
With all the tomorrow like yesterday?

Is it just a job, just a task to do,
So many pieces to build anew?
So many figures to add, and then
Hence for a while and back again
Are you just a clerk in a gaudy shop,
Deceived when a customer fails to stop,
Finding no joy in the things you sell,
Fretting the waiting, the quelling hell?
Are your thoughts confined to the narrow square
And the dreariness of your present place?

Is it just a job, or a golden chance
Of the great prize of a new advance,
The starting place on the road to
trade
To the better job and the bigger desire,
To see the future go on to the dawn of a new day?

What is the view of your circumstance,
Is it just a job or a golden chance
Of the great prize of a new advance,
trade

LIFE OR DEATH

By Howard N. Miller
To hope is life, to fear is death,

The end of life is the grave.

Woman Suffered in Silence

Health Poor, Beauty Fast Fading Away—
Made Believe She Was Well.

A woman of New Auburn (Me.) writes: "There must be lots of women who feel as I did. I suffered in silence many times on account of my pride, but now I know that a good laxative is essential to good health. I neglected my health trying to keep cheery and pretending I had terrible pains, was 'grouchy' and my headaches almost killed me with pain, and worst of all from my viewpoint I had a sorrow, unbecoming complexion which was not helped by face powders. Why didn't I try to cure myself rather than pretend? After taking Dr. True's Elixir, I now know that a laxative was what I needed. Dr. True's Elixir is mild and pleasant to take, and works just right for me. My complexion cleared up bright and ruddy, blemishes vanished and every one remarked how much better I looked." — Mrs. E. J. B., New Auburn, Me.

The root of many of the evils of sickness is the bowels, a very vital part of the human body.

A cold, a fever, diseases or the like can be helped at once, providing the operation of the bowels is normal—the first and most important relief can be had by giving a Laxative, be sure it is the proper kind.

Most everybody in these days of quick action and strife, forget their health. The laboring people bolt down their meals, often go to bed right after eating, and wake up in the morning restless, force down a breakfast and then are distressed all day.

An Outdoor Worker says: "I couldn't puzzle out what made me feel so bad. My good, home cooked meals didn't even taste good, and I had headaches."

The fear of death itself is death. And hope or fear, to age from youth. Delights or blights each mortal's path.

Hope knows no fear, knows no hope, And earth is heaven to those who trust. While useless skies shroud those who grope. For wisdom in confusion's dust.

Hope is the ever flaming star The orb of life's supernal seat— Blazing the trackless spaces far, To homeward guide faith's eager feet.

The craven fool who daily dies The hero's one triumphant death Resigns to fear life's only prize, And harkens heaven for a breath.

U. S. A. NATION OF NIMRODS NOW HAS 7,000,000 HUNTERS

This is a Nation of Nimrods. There are 7,000,000 hunters in the United States, according to the chief United States game warden in the Biological Survey, United States Department of Agriculture. This estimate was made from reports on the number of game licenses issued by the various States.

In 1919, 3,600,000 State licenses were issued, and in addition it is estimated that 3,500,000 hunters are exempted under various State provisions. The revenue to the States from licenses was approximately $4,500,000, all of which was expended by the States in administration of State laws for the protection of game. This sum permits the employment of approximately 2,000 State game wardens and 600 Federal wardens. The congressional appropriation for Federal game warden service for protection of migratory birds is $142,000, which permits the employment of only 59 salaried wardens.

At its recent meeting in Ottawa the International Association of Fish, Game and Conservation Commissioners adopted a resolution calling for the issuance of Federal licenses for hunting migratory birds. The recommendation called for licenses in the form of special stamps to be issued by postmasters and attached to State licenses. It was estimated that the revenue from such stamps would amount to between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000, which could be used for the protection of game.

MISS CARVER RESIGNS

Miss Gertrude Carver, for the past two years connected with the State Department of Health has resigned her position as assistant in the Bureau of Public Health Education and Promotion. Miss Carver has been associated with the bureau and the Bureau of Health since 1918. She was formerly a member of the State Board of Health and the State Board of Education.

Another apparently instinctive attempt to combine with corn meal the baking ingredients is the dish known as "scrapple." This is made by cooking corn meal in the water in which pork usually a pig's head has been boiled, and combining this mixture with the finely chopped pork. The addition of the meat, which consists largely of protein and fat, to the corn meal, of which starch is a prominent ingredient, tends to produce a complete meal. "Scrapple" and game sausage are made up of cut fish, pork and corn meal, and has a nutritive value like that of scrapple. The use of starch, which consists chiefly of protein and fat, with gelatin may be considered an instinctive attempt by the Indians to satisfy the physiological requirement by means of a single dish.

Most of the dishes mentioned above and was grouchy. I never thought it was constipation, but now I know, for I took four doses of your Dr. True's Elixir, and it fixed me up grand. I will never be without it again in case of constipation." — E. B. B., Allston, Mass.

The bowels need attention first and always. Rich foods, improper cooking, irregular and quick eating, lack of exercise can all be offset, providing a mild laxative is taken regularly.

A Business Man writes: "The continual rush of office details and the short meal hours I get, together with, I think, restaurant foods, has simply knocked my system all to pieces. I felt loggy, and had no appetite until I took Dr. True's Elixir, as a Laxative. It is a great thing. No one should neglect their bowels."

Dr. True's Elixir, the Family Laxative and Worm Expeller, with an established reputation since 1851 (over 69 years) has accomplished the seemingly impossible. It has relieved thousands of sufferers from constipation, which causes so many terrible disorders.

Dr. True's Elixir will benefit everyone. The laborer who eats heartily and quickly; the office boy and girl who eat "fancies" and irregularly; elderly people who can't digest well and children who suffer from intestinal parasites.

Symptoms of worms: Derailed stomach, swollen upper lip, offensive breath, hard and full belly, with occasional pains about the navel, pale face, eyes heavy and dull, twitching eyelids, itching of the nose and rectum, short dry cough, grinding of the teeth, red points on the tongue, starting during sleep.

Dr. True's Elixir means a big saving in health and pocketbook. "At all dealers." Three sizes. Buy the large size. Advertisement.

CORN MEAL CAN BE COOKED IN MANY WAYS

Each Locality Has Methods of Its Own

Crisp hot corn bread with plenty of butter and a pitcher of buttermilk! Who could ask for anything better? Centuries of use have not affected the liking of the human race for dishes made of Indian or corn meal, nor lessened the amount eaten. Investigations made by the United States Department of Agriculture show that more than 60 per cent of the food consumed by the people of the United States is of vegetable origin and of this about one-seventh is corn meal. Each locality where corn is used in large amounts seems to have worked out its own peculiar dishes.

The southern cook made hockeys, or corn pone, or ash cake, by cooking a dough of corn meal and water on a board before an open fire, or by baking it in the ashes. Sometimes a little fat was added. The early New Englander made similar cakes, which, when baked before the fire, were sometimes baked with cream to make them richer. The New Englander also made "hasty pudding" by cooking corn meal in a large quantity of water a staple article of diet. This was so made that when hot it was thin enough to be eaten as a mush with milk, and when cold thick enough to be fried in slices. The Italian has his polenta, which resembles hasty pudding, except that it is made of some what thicker and that a little fat or cheese is added, and in the eastern Mediterranean regions many corn meal dishes are very important foods. The American Indian makes a corn bread of which it is usually seasoned highly.

Combine It With Protein Foods

Readers these simple dishes contain proteins have worked out combinations of corn meal with foods differing from it widely in composition. Corn meal contains protein, fat, and starch, but the protein is lower than it should be in the diet as a whole and a trade over than it is in wheat. Instinctively, therefore, people seem to combine corn meal with foods in which the protein is more prominent. This is shown by the fact that almost every locality which uses corn meal in large amounts has a characteristic dish in which it is used with beans, meat, or other foods richer in protein. Probably the best known dishes of this kind in the United States are scrapple—learned from the Indians and in early times made of dry corn and beans as well as of green—the mush and milk of the earlier settlers of New England and the fish cake and salt fish of the South.

Another apparently instinctive attempt to combine with corn meal the baking ingredients is the dish known as "scrapple." This is made by cooking corn meal in the water in which pork usually a pig's head has been boiled, and combining this mixture with the finely chopped pork. The addition of the meat, which consists largely of protein and fat, to the corn meal, of which starch is a prominent ingredient, tends to produce a complete meal. "Scrapple" and game sausage are made up of cut fish, pork and corn meal, and has a nutritive value like that of scrapple. The use of starch, which consists chiefly of protein and fat, with gelatin may be considered an instinctive attempt by the Indians to satisfy the physiological requirement by means of a single dish.

had their origin in times when life was much simpler than it is at present and when fewer dishes were served at a meal. In most American homes of the present meals consist not of one but of several dishes, and there is a considerable variety of food materials used in the course of a day or a week. When the protein foods and the fruits and vegetables are represented sufficiently in other dishes, there is, of course, no necessity for providing these in the same dish with the corn meal. Corn meal, therefore, now is used chiefly as a breakfast cereal or in the form of bread.

An important feature of a well-planned diet is attractive flavor. This has a real physiological importance because appetizing food stimulates digestion. Combining staple foods with different savory materials prevents the diet from becoming monotonous, and adding materials of distinctive flavor to mild flavored ones makes larger quantities of the latter acceptable. These facts have been instinctively recognized wherever corn meal has been used in large quantities. The Zuni Indians have a dish which is called "hot cakes." They make it by combining corn meal with water and suet and adding a large amount of red pepper. In the United States it was a custom in olden times to vary many of the corn-meal dishes by the addition of tart apples, and in Italy polenta usually is served either with a highly seasoned sauce or with cheese. When it is necessary to use corn meal very freely, the desirability of varying its flavor and texture should be kept in mind. Fried corn-meal mush, for example, offering as it does the flavor of boiled meal and also of parched meal, and being crisp on the outside and soft within, has a different taste from the mush itself, and so provides variety.

Making Mush That Won't Lump

Recipes for the use of corn meal that will be useful everywhere are not easy to make, for the meal used in various parts of the country differs considerably. In general the granular, which is used more commonly in the North, requires more water and longer cooking than the water ground, which is used more generally in the South. This extra cooking is needed to soften the meal and remove the granular quality from which it gets its name, and must often be given to the meal before it is used in making bread, or such dishes as waffles or doughnuts.

In order to produce a satisfactory flavor it seems necessary that the mush should at some time reach the boiling point. The most common way of preparing mush is to allow the water to come to the boiling point and to add the meal slowly, stirring constantly. The objection to this method is that there is considerable danger that the mush will become lumpy and oftentimes it is inconvenient and unpleasant to stand over a hot stove and stir the mixture sufficiently to make it smooth. A better method and one recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture is the following:

Put the corn meal, cold water, and salt together in the top of a double boiler. No stirring is necessary. Put the top of the double boiler into the lower part and allow the mush to heat slowly, cooking half an hour, or longer, if convenient. Many people cook it as long as four hours. Just before serving remove the top of the double boiler from the lower part and boil the mush for two or three minutes. In boiling at at this time there is no danger that it will lump.

NEW FALL STYLES

Light and Airy Colors Is Prediction for Season.

Designers Are Endeavoring to Eliminate Lines Which Will Give Wearer Broad Appearance.

A time in fashionable places is a most fascinating hour this time of the year, as we are all tired of sport clothes and this affords an opportunity of seeing something decidedly new in little afternoon frocks, according to a fashion authority.

It is going to continue to be a fall season of light airy colors—cream lace for afternoon wear and black lace for evening wear—quite the reverse of what we have been accustomed to.

A charming frock worn at tea by a blonde miss was deep ecru pussy willow taffeta and an overdress of fishnet lace in cream color. A wide ribbon girdle with immense bow and streamer ends in the back was of wide ribbon in light tobacco brown. The whole dress carried three tones of the lighter shades of brown beautifully blended. The hat worn was one of the newer models, a medium-sized rolling brim. It was a brown duvetyne, beautifully hand embroidered in several oriental shades. The crown, semi-Tam O'Shanter effect, was of silver metallic embroidery trimmed on one side with a soft bow of glossy brown satin ribbon.

Black lace certainly reigns supreme for evening affairs.

Whether a coat is long or short, wide or narrow at the bottom, or a wrap of conservative rich velvet or any other popular material, the designers are endeavoring to eliminate any lines which will give the wearer a broad appearance.

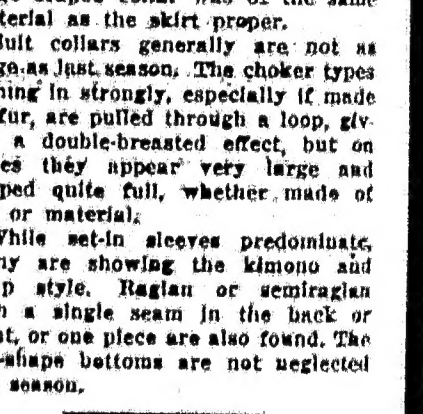

The majority of suit coats are almost knee length, many unbelted and slightly flaring at the bottom, but not rippled, although a few show pointed insets of contrasting materials.

One suit was most novel, showing a cape instead of a coat. The skirt was made on plain straight lines, the material being rusty gold-colored duvetyne, the bottom finished with a five inch band of the same material in dull belt blue duvetyne and around the bottom was a band of the gold-colored duvetyne put on underneath as a facing and it had no other lining. The large draped collar was of the same material as the skirt proper.

Suit collars generally are not as large as just season. The choker types coming in strongly, especially if made of fur, are pulled through a loop, giving a double-breasted effect, but on capes they appear very large and draped quite full, whether made of fur or material.

While set-in sleeves predominate, many are showing the kimono and wrap style. Raglan or semiraglan with a single seam in the back or front, or one piece are also found. The bell-shaped bottoms are not neglected this season.

HAT AND BAG MADE TO MATCH

Large black panne velvet hat; trimming appliqued design of duvetyne; color, green, orange, sand and blue. The facing of hat is green duvetyne and the bag is to match the hat.

FASHIONS IN BRIEF

Jet is much used with tulle. Coat sleeves are often kimono style, wide and long.

Ladder stitching is effective on white fingered blouses.

French hats are elaborately trimmed with ribbons and feathers.

One of the very popular styles of the coming season is the redingote type dress.

Some of the newest bathing sandals are merely soles, with two sets of bright colored ribbons laced about the ankle to hold them on.

Upon dresses of all varieties which are not subjected to tub cleansing radix is used. Satin and serge especially tend themselves to this sort of embroidery.

A new millinery model particularly becoming to a brunette is a circle of ostrich feathers in attractive shades of bronze and green and blue, over which falls a lace veil in tete de negre.

Black marquisette has been successfully introduced as a substitute for chiffon and georgette. One frock of this material is a series of narrow tucks and plaits which are repeated in blouse, sleeves and skirt.

Dolman coats are trimmed with two-toned braids.

Smart hats for children are of taffeta and satin.

Smart hats for children are of taffeta and satin.

CONDENSED CLASSICS

CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS

By RUDYARD KIPLING

Condensation by James B. Connolly

Rudyard Kipling was born Dec. 30, 1865, in Bombay, where his father, John Lockwood Kipling, artist and author, was professor in the British School of Art. He was educated at the United Service College, Westward Ho, North Devon, scene of the lurid Stalky novel.

At seventeen he was in India once more, a journalist. Before he was twenty-four he had completed "Plain Tales From the Hills" and six more of his best stories, which established his fame throughout the world.

In the tales of native life and adventure "beyond the pale" India was revealed anew with a brilliance, color and passion unsurpassed. Mulvaney and his pals, the exuberant "Soldiers Three," captivated men from sea to sea.

Within the next ten years Kipling traveled round the world, married, lived in America, England and South Africa, and finally became so imbued with imperialism as almost to destroy his art.

His "Barrack Room Ballads" and "Seven Seas" revealed him as an inspiring poet who "splashed at a ten-league canvas with brushes of camel's hair."

Of his three novels, "The Light That Failed" is a tale of Suez; "Captains Courageous" of Gloucester fishermen, and "Kim" breathes again the subtle and mysterious fascination of India.

With the "Jungle Books" Kipling enthralled a new audience. These, and the incomparable "Just So Stories," written to his son who was killed in the war, enshrined him in the hearts of children the world over.

HARVEY CHEYNE'S father was immersed in amassing more money; his mother was busy with her nerves; and so we have Harvey, at fifteen years, the insufferable type that most grown mules want to heave a brick at on sight.

He was a passenger on this ocean liner, and she was crossing the Grand Banks in a fog. He came into the smoking room saying: "You can hear the fish boats squawking all around us. Wouldn't it be great if we ran one down!"

He asked for a cigarette. Somebody with a diabolical sense of humor passed him a thick, oily cigar. Harvey lit it up and went on deck. He began to feel queer, but he had bragged of never being seasick; so now he went aft to the turtle deck, and he was still there, wrestling with the clear and not caring much what happened, when a long gray sea swung out of the fog and took him overboard.

Harvey was next aware of being on a pile of fish with a broad-backed man in a blue jersey, who said: "You in dory with me. Manuel my name." Later he was hoisted aboard of a schooner and lowered into her heaving fo'c'sle where men in oilskins gave him a hot drink and put him to sleep in a bunk. When he awoke a boy whose name was Dan asked him smilingly if he was feeling better. The schooner was the "We're Here" of Gloucester, and the boy's father, Disko Troop, was her skipper.

Harvey went up on deck to see Disko; and demanded that he be taken back to New York, where, as he told Disko condescendingly his father would pay them very well for their trouble; he added many other items to what his father could and would do. Disko, as it happened, was an old-fashioned type of banks fisherman, wise in the ways of fish but knowing little of the great world. He decided that this boy with his talk of his father's immense wealth must be crazy; with an idea of restoring the poor boy to sanity he offered him the berth of second boy on the "We're Here" at $10.50 per month.

Harvey had a fit of silliness, but his silliness worried nobody; he went to work. The dories were returning to the vessel with their catches of fish; so for the first work of his life Harvey was set to helping Dan hoist in the dories, to swabbing the rury from their insides and then to nesting them on the deck. By the time he had finished doing that and eating his supper it was nighttime, and Manuel, Penn, Long Jack, Old Salters, Tom Platt—all hands were standing by to dress fish.

Manuel and Penn stood deep among the fish, flourishing sharp knives. "Hi!" shouted Manuel, with one finger under the gill of a cod, the other in an eye. The blade glimmered, there was a sound of tearing, the fish—slit from throat to tail—dropped at Long Jack's feet. "Hi!" cried Long Jack and, with a scoop of a mittened hand, dropped the cod's liver into a basket; another wriggle and scoop sent head and offal flying. The gutted fish slid across to Old Salters, who snorted fiercely, ripped out the backbone and splashed the headless, gutless fish into a tub of water.

Harvey pitched the washed fish down into the hold, from whence came trampings and rumbles as Tom Platt and Disko moved among the salt bins. The rasping sound of rough salt rubbed on rough flesh from below made a steady undertone to the click of the knives in the pens, the wrench and schloop of torn heads, the flap of ripped-open fish falling into the tub on deck.

At the end of an hour Harvey wanted terribly to rest, but also for the first time in his life he was one of a working gang of men; and so, beginning to take pride in the thought, he held on grimly. Not till the last fish was stowed below did a man rest. But when that moment came! Disko and Old Salters rolled toward their cabin bunks, Manuel and Long Jack went forward. Tom Platt waited only long enough to slide home the hatch.

All hands were below and asleep, except the two boys; they had to stand watch; so by and by the moon looked down on one slim boy in knickerbockers, which was Harvey, staggering around the cluttered deck; while behind him, waving a knotted rope, walked another boy, which was Dan, yawning and nodding between taps he dealt the first boy to keep him awake.

The "We're Here" was on a salt-fishing trip which meant four months away from home; so there was time for Harvey to learn many strange new things if he cared to. After a time, as the pride in honest work well done began to grip him, he cared. He learned to fish from a dory; to make his way in safety around a heaving vessel's deck; to know what each rope and sail aboard a vessel was for. Disko allowed him, when the wind was light, to steer the vessel from one berth to another, and wonderful was Harvey's sense of power when he first felt the vessel answer to his touch of the wheel. Almost did he come to understand, as a fisherman understands, the never-absent dangers of the banks, the eternal fogs, the tides, the gales, the wicked seas; and learned, too, fishermen's opinion of the officers of the great steamers who, after cutting a vessel down, raise high hands to heaven and swear with unanimity that the careless fisherman had never—absolutely never—shown so much as a single light.

He saw one day a foul, draggled, unkempt vessel heaving up just the "We're Here," for all the world like a blowzy, frousy, bad old woman sneering at a decent girl, saw her sail off and into a batch of watery sunshine and—go under, taking all hands with her! He saw, while his hair stood on end, a whiteness moving in the whiteness of the fog with a breath like the breath of a grave; and then he heard a roaring, plunging and spouting; that was his first iceberg. He saw the surf break over Virgin Rocks; and the fish strike in so thick on a shoal that scores of dories stood riding gunnel to gunnel while their crews battled for the catch.

He saw a gale break so sudden and fierce that everywhere on the sea were men in dories cutting riding lines and racing for their vessels, but some never making their vessels.

So he passed four busy, wonderful months, growing in body, mind and soul with every hour that passed; and then came the great day when they left the banks for home. Toll hardship and danger were now mostly behind them; there was left little to do but stand watch and study the folding and packing away of the morning mists, the hurry of winds across the open spaces, the glare and blaze of the high sun; to harken to the grinding of the booms against the masts, the creaking of the sheets against the bits, the sail flapping to the roaring winds.

Now about the time the "We're Here," a hundred quintals of fish in her hold, was laying her course for Gloucester, Harvey's father was beginning to wonder in his mahogany offices in Los Angeles if it wasn't a better game to drop the ceaseless struggle for more power and wealth. What was the use of it all—with no son to hand it to? He was still wondering when one day an excited secretary brought him a telegram.

It was from Harvey, safe in Gloucester. Mr. Cheyne laid his face down on his desk, breathed heavily for awhile; and then, heaving orders right and left, started that run of which railroad men talked for many a day. Three days and a half it was from coast to coast, with railroad specialists along the way dividing huge bonuses; for it was the great Harvey Cheyne who was racing East to see his rescued boy, and the boy's mother was with him.

Not without fear did he meet that boy. He had a memory of a pasty-faced, bad-mannered lad. What he met was a boy with toughened figure and a keen, clear eye. Railroads, lumber, mines—such things did not interest young Harvey. What his heart yearned for was to some day manage his father's heavy purchased sailing ships on the Pacific Coast. The ships he got when he was ripe for them; and for Dan, son of Disko Troop—seeing that he could not offer money—he got a berth as mate of one of them, with the promise that some day he would go master of the best he could build.

"Great ships these of my father's! Oh, yes," says Harvey. "But back in Gloucester are the able little vessels. The 'We're Here,' she's one. I owe a heap to her—to her and her crew." Sounds Like Affection. "This aviator is not conrolled!" "I hardly think so. Still there's a something in his manner that grates on me." "Yes?" "I don't like the casual way in which he says traveling 150 miles an hour in a plane is 'crawling through the air.'" —Birmingham Age-Herald.

LEGION TO AID IMMIGRANTS

Plan Mapped Out by American Commission of Veterans' Organization to Extend Welcome.

Immigrants entering the United States will be received and welcomed by members of the American Legion, according to plans mapped out by the National American commission of the veterans' organization. Arrangements have been made whereby the local post of the community which is the ultimate destination of the immigrant will get in touch with him immediately upon his arrival.

Information as to the names and destinations of all immigrants will be secured at the port of New York and forwarded immediately to the thousands of Legion posts in order that they may prepare for the reception of the new arrivals.

"In some cases the immigrant may be going directly to friends," says the announcement of the American commission, "but in many cases he will be friendless and will be sure to have great trouble. He may need assistance in finding out where he can learn English, where he can send his children to school, where he can find a place to live and a place to work. Nothing could be more effective in lining up the new arrival on the side of law and order and of the things we believe in as being best for the country than this friendly welcome. It is this personal greeting from America that will help make the newcomer a 100 per cent American."

Federal Vocational Training Board Commends Consideration and Cooperation in Connecticut.

Thomas J. Hannigan, director of the service department of the American Legion at Hartford, Conn., has received this letter from Thomas Kirby, central office eligibility officer for the federal vocational training board:

"Before leaving Connecticut I desire on behalf of the chief at Washington and the whole federal board to express sincere appreciation for the consistent consideration and hearty co-operation of the American Legion during our stay in this state."

"There is consummate satisfaction and justifiable pride as we see these men, bearing the honorable scars of national service, marching into the dawn of a new era in their lives to become more valuable to themselves and to the country, and in the success that has attended our efforts the wholehearted support of your organization has been a conspicuous asset."

"While we are to be physically separated from you, you may be assured the triple chain of appreciation, respect and esteem that has bound you close to us during our brief but strenuous campaign will continue intact, and if in the future the Legion has any suggestions that might aid us in our work, they will receive the most respectful and serious consideration of the high authorities of the board."

Mr. Hannigan also is the adjutant of the department of Connecticut.

foremost members of the Association went so far as to suggest that there should be more business in government and less government in business. This popular belief is doubtless predicated upon the mistakes that are made in government policies. The Federal Government is in such close working union with the bankers of the country that the latter have become thoroughly familiar with the financial policies of the Government. It therefore developed that Secretary of the Treasury Houston found a receptive audience when he acknowledged the gross defects of the existing tax laws.

SEEK FREEDOM OF ACTION

Philip H. Gadsden, Chairman of the Emergency Committee of the American Gas Association, says that many gas companies are unable to obtain contracts for oil even at the prevailing high prices. It appears that the automotive industry is getting the lion's share of the available oil supply in the way of gasoline. Mr. Gadsden expresses the belief that freedom from too rigid legislation, both as to standards and to rates is the chief need of the gas interests. By giving the companies freedom to regulate their own prices in accordance with their costs, will, he believes, enable them to buy oil and the other necessary supplies for manufacturing their product on an independent basis, without making unnecessary favors from anybody. This would enable the gas companies to sell their products to the public at the same reasonable margin of profit that is required in every other industry.

MIDNIGHT RIDES

The "Midnight Ride of Paul Revere" had nothing on a couple of representative business men who had a brief but exciting adventure in Washington, on a moonlight night. These men, visitors in the Capital, hired a big touring car at midnight, and started out to see the town. Relying on a couple of attractive women walking on Pennsylvania Avenue, they ordered the driver to stop, and invited the women to join them. The invitation was readily accepted, and one of the women, as soon as she was in the car, ordered the driver to "go to the first precinct." A few minutes later the party was landed at a police station, and the business men found to their consternation that their companions were none other than the superintendent of the women police and her assistant. They were charged with "maiming" and "disorderly conduct." Bail was fixed at twenty-five dollars apiece, by the desk sergeant. The unfortunate guests gave delicious names, and then failed to appear in the police court the next morning.

DISPOSING OF THE EXPRESS.

Until Colonel Roosevelt "objected" and showed the country otherwise, the expressmen were usually "chastened." The question of what to do with them has been debated since General Washington retired to Mount Vernon, almost crushed in spirit because of the ingratitude and abuse of a large part of his fellow countrymen. Washington, as no president was about as popular as a wet night among campers in the Adirondacks.

The long line of presidents who followed him returned to private life and permitted themselves to be tucked away into comparative oblivion. But Colonel Roosevelt set a new style, and the American public was forced to change its policy to the extent of a President Taft. Very shortly the society of expressmen was reduced to a few stragglers who were not even considered as a part of the country. When the President was in Paris it was made known that he would devote his time to writing history, upon the completion of his term. It is taken for granted among Washingtonians that he will take his typewriter and settle down in a new suburban home, and disappear of himself in the same manner. However, it may be expected that he will feel that he belongs quite as much to the public as Mr. Taft, and the two of them will doubtless be considered as our great national benefactors.

The spotlight on a real is the last word in fancy devices for the actor. It is made to do as much as the actor himself, and is always ready for use. It is the most perfect of the modern and with thanks and for the actor, and the "master" to pull out any device up to twelve feet. The action is the same as that of a window shade. The extended cord runs easily back into the wall and can be pulled out at any time. It is a valuable for lighting trouble and making repairs at night.

BATES COLLEGE NEWS

Neither Bates nor Bowdoin were able to develop enough of the winning punch to score a single touch-down in the game at Lewiston, Saturday. The teams were evenly matched, and were using the same sort of play, working several good forward passes, while Bowdoin tried for three field goals, but missed.

The Junior class has purchased a goat, which it will maintain for the rest of the year, to remain the property of the college. "Billy Bates," as he is called, has made a big hit with the undergraduates.

In accordance with custom, men of all four classes are out on the athletic field these afternoons preparing for the highly interesting and usually amusing intra-mural football games, which are played after the varsity season is over. This year the freshmen have an unusually strong team, as practice has been compulsory for them; they have a game scheduled for Thursday, Nov. 11, with Thornton Academy, which should test their mettle thoroughly, considering the work the Saco boys have been doing this year. This is the first freshman football team in the history of Maine College athletics.

The first vesper service of the year was held in the College Chapel, Sunday afternoon, October 31. The college choir furnished a large part of the program, the "piece de resistance" being Mendelssohn's "Judge Me, Oh God." President Gray gave an excellent address on "Well Founded Optimism."

Bates is to have varsity basketball this winter for the first time for many years, although the matter has been much agitated, and interclass games have brought out much good material and a great deal of interest. Physical Director Smith, for many years considered an authority on the sport in New York, is to coach the team. He has already arranged a schedule which will include many institutions out of the State, among them Harvard.

DIMENSIONS AND AREA OF THE UNITED STATES

The gross area of the United States is 3,028,789 square miles. The land area amounts to 2,973,774 square miles, and the water area—exclusive of the area in the Great Lakes, the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf of Mexico within the three-mile limit—amounts to 55,015 square miles. These and other data determined or compiled by the United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, to show the limits of the continental United States, contain some interesting facts.

The southernmost point of the mainland is Cape Sable, Fla., which is in latitude 25° 07' and longitude 81° 05'. The extreme southern point of Texas is in latitude 25° 50' and longitude 97° 24'. Cape Hable is therefore 40 miles farther south than the most southern point in Texas.

A small detached land area of northern Minnesota at longitude 95° 09' extends northward to latitude 49° 23'. The easternmost point of the United States is West Quoddy Head, near Eastport, Me., in longitude 66° 57' and latitude 44° 49'; the westernmost point is Cape Alva, Wash., in latitude 48° 10', which extends into the Pacific ocean to longitude 124° 45'.

From the southernmost point in Texas due north to the forty-ninth parallel, the boundary between the United States and Canada, the distance is 1,598 miles. From West Quoddy Head due west to the Pacific ocean the distance is 2,807 miles. The shortest distance from the Atlantic to the Pacific across the United States is between points near Charleston, S. C., and San Diego, Cal., and is 2,152 miles.

The length of the Canadian boundary, of one party alone, of business men of this kind in Oxford County, and among them may be mentioned John M. Philbrook of Bethel, Elliott W. Howe and John E. Stephens of Rumford, John B. Robinson of Oxford, and John S. Harlow of Dixfield.

"Of all the public men with whom I have served, John M. Philbrook stands out first and foremost. He was the ablest among them all, and had no other purpose but to do his duty thoroughly and well—and all for the people as he would himself. What a business Governor he would have made. There are men as able perhaps as John Philbrook, I know, who would be less influenced by private interest from doing his full public duty. He is the type of a public man I admire above all others."

"Elliott W. Howe ought to be in the public service. He is a very able man, and of the utmost integrity. Probably he is not much of a favorite with the 'broken-nosed' and treacherous politicians, and perhaps that is the chief reason he has not been called into the public service, but that ought to quicken the demand of the people for him. That he will yet come to the front, unless his private affairs prevent, I have not the least doubt."

"John E. Stephens of Rumford is another good business man and a fine citizen in every way. He, too, would serve the public well in any position he could be induced to accept."

"I am saddened at the recent death of Augustus G. Morse of Waterford. He was the same kind of a business man as the others mentioned. Had he lived he would probably have been a candidate in two years for State Senator. He had previously served in the House. His untimely death is a great loss."

INTRODUCING MARY JANE

The latest comer to the staff of the Maine Department of Health is Mary Jane, assistant in the Division of Public Health Nursing and Child Hygiene, of which Miss Edith L. Boule is director.

Mary Jane's work is in the cause of healthier babies and her services are much in demand. She is to be sure, nothing but a hospital doll, exact duplicate in size and shape to a four months old baby. She attends fairs, exhibits, baby shows and clinics where mothers gather to learn how best to care for their little ones.

She has a skin that can be bathed, a body just the size of any four months baby, and joints which enable her to be placed in any position which a live baby might assume. She is at the service of public health nurses everywhere in Maine where demonstrations how to bathe and clothe the baby are given.

Mary Jane made her first appearance last week at Brunswick where Miss Anna Clark, the Red Cross nurse there, held a baby day at which, besides the Health Department Doll, was a stereotypical lecture on the care of the baby which is likewise at the service of any health workers who will apply for it of the Health Department.

Her wardrobe is as yet uncertain but plans are under way for requesting the patients at the Central Maine Sanatorium who by the way are beautiful embroiderers and sewers, to make her a complete outfit of healthful, up to date baby clothes.

She is at the service of Maine Health workers and may be had upon application to Miss Boule. All who have seen her are enthusiastic as to her value as a

A POSSIBLE FUTURE GOVERNOR

The following with the above caption was taken from the Norway Advertiser of October 29 and will be of interest to our readers.

"The legislative district, composed of Oxford, Norway and Waterford, has chosen a Norway citizen as a member of the House of Representatives. This should be but the beginning of a political career that will place him in the Governor's chair. He has the ability and all the qualifications which are essential in the making of a good business Governor."

"The people today appear not to be looking for men for high positions, who can make fine speeches, but for those who will conduct affairs entrusted to them ably, economically, and well, and for the best interests of all classes of the people. In short, good business men, who know what is needed to be done, and have the ability to do it. The call for this class of men, unless all signs fail, will be louder and louder, and may increase from a gentle whisper to a hurricane."

"I hear that George R. Morton, treasurer, and general manager of the Paris Manufacturing Company, and one of the best business men of this section, is a candidate for the Governor's Council. He is amply qualified for this position. Indeed he is exactly the kind of a man the office requires, and one who will do his part towards making the coming administration with the business men and taxpayers, popular, but also a bigger and better Maine, which Sam Connor says, and Sam always knows whereof he writes, the new Governor is determined to do. There is a large class, not of one party alone, of business men of this kind in Oxford County, and among them may be mentioned John M. Philbrook of Bethel, Elliott W. Howe and John E. Stephens of Rumford, John B. Robinson of Oxford, and John S. Harlow of Dixfield."

"Of all the public men with whom I have served, John M. Philbrook stands out first and foremost. He was the ablest among them all, and had no other purpose but to do his duty thoroughly and well—and all for the people as he would himself. What a business Governor he would have made. There are men as able perhaps as John Philbrook, I know, who would be less influenced by private interest from doing his full public duty. He is the type of a public man I admire above all others."

"Elliott W. Howe ought to be in the public service. He is a very able man, and of the utmost integrity. Probably he is not much of a favorite with the 'broken-nosed' and treacherous politicians, and perhaps that is the chief reason he has not been called into the public service, but that ought to quicken the demand of the people for him. SOUTH BETHEL SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT

Teacher, Miss Clara Mason; number of pupils, 22.

On the evening of Oct. 29, the schoolhouse at South Bethel was filled by interested parents and friends of the pupils who had been invited to an "Autumn Party." As the guests arrived each presented a magic coin to the black witch who guarded the entrance and some of her attendants gave them a program decorated with various pictures of bats, cats and pumpkin faces. Many Jack-o'-lanterns glowed in window ledges and twinkled from dim corners. The walls were very attractive with pictures made by the pupils—and many specimens of their work—such as test papers, compositions, etc.—were displayed to advantage on a background of green paper. The following program was carried out in a very easy and happy manner, a particularly pleasing feature of the whole evening being the perfect understanding existing between teacher and pupils and the loyal team work of all from the tiny tots of five years to the stalwart "man size" boy of 16.

Women have been going to market in the old-fashioned way with market baskets on their arms. They have picked up the cantaloupes, the berries and the cuts of meat and looked them over. If the quality and the price were not satisfactory they refused to buy them. They have gone into the Department stores in a similar way. If they found the price exorbitant and the quality ordinary, they had the courage to walk out. If they could not find what they wanted at a reasonable price they decided to forego the purchase and to wait until the price came down.

Women have been figuring out how much they are justified in spending for the maintenance of the home. They have been budgeting their incomes and keeping an account of their expenditures. They have been studying the value of foods and clothes realizing that the greatest business of the nation, namely the purchase of food and cloth, and other household necessities, must be run on the same business like principles as a commercial enterprise.

In the face of the awakened public conscience the price of commodities must be justified by the fundamental economic principles which should determine prices. The producer or dealer who would violate these principles and profiteer upon the people cannot continue to do business with the American public.

Promoters of fake investment schemes who have inveigled innocent people into exchanging their Liberty Bonds for worthless stocks, and dealers who during the flurry of extravagance following the Armistice, accepted bonds in payment for fur coats and other luxuries which the consumers could not afford will find slim picking in the field of Liberty Bond holders who have lately been learning the facts about their Liberty Bonds and other safe securities.

The essential thing now in view of the recent tendency to reduce prices is that the public should be fair both with themselves and with business. If people rush in and overbuy because goods are being reduced, or if they expect prices to be reduced below the point of normal profit to producers and dealers they will create another economic condition as unfortunate as the one from which they are just emerging.

While we are protesting our private pocket books against the American tendency to extravagance and against unscrupulous profiteers we must not lose confidence in legitimate business. Business must be supported in order to live. It must be liberally supported in order to be healthy.

The American public has its efforts to reduce prices during the past few months shown a large degree of economic sanity. It is important that the same degree of sanity be practiced now in this new condition which the reduction of prices is bringing about.
